Vintage, Baby

1.5 degrees of lifestyle on the skin.

What do I need to know?

Vintage or second-hand clothing is very trendy at the moment. Second hand allows you to be creativ, express your individuality and is good for your wallet.

Reuse means that resources are used locally and for longer, which is good for the environment and society.

Clothing that has already been used has the advantage that they smells better than some new purchases.

Giving garments a second life is an expression of a sustainable lifestyle.

In this guide, we'll tell you what you need to know about second-hand clothing.

Where and how can I find vintage clothing?

You can find second-hand clothing e.g. at flea markets, in vintage/second-hand stores and online on relevant platforms and apps.

pre-owned

For your search, keywords such as e.g. VINTAGE, PRE-OWNED, PRE-LOVED, SECOND LIFE, RE-SALE, SECOND HAND and REFURBISHED.

What should I look for?

Second hand contributes to a sustainable lifestyle if you consciously only buy the clothes you absolutely need.

Look for sustainable materials

It's really great if you can also buy second-hand sustainable materials

If you can't find any information online, you can also actively ask. In the store simply check if the garment feels good.

Don't be scared by the abundance of goods. There are many treasures hidden here just waiting to be found.

Your friends are probably still wearing items in their wardrobes that fit you really well. Who knows, maybe from now on you'll be one of them, who have made a habit of only buying and wearing second-hand.

Further information

You are welcome to visit our information cosmos about second hand and its impact on the environment and society.

Our information cosmos

You too can support the sustainability movement with your knowledge of second hand and share your experiences with your community.

